Thad Radzilowski, lecturer in history, was elected to a two-year term as the co-chair of the National Polish American Jewish American Council (NPAJAC) headquartered in Washington. "NPAJAC brings together Polish-American and Jewish-American leaders from across the nation to address issues of common concern, to develop mutual understanding in the spirit of openness and to work cooperatively to advocate for human rights and basic freedoms," according to Radzilowski. "The work of the council is rooted in the most generous traditions of the millennium-long history the two communities share." Radzilowski has been involved with the council for 25 years. The other co-chair is Martin Bresler of New York.
